

DISCOVERING ARCHITECTURE SUMMER CAMP

June 2 - June 14, 2008

Discovering Architecture is an exciting summer day camp developed for high school students who are interested in learning more about the art and science of design. The camp is jointly sponsored by the Architecture Program at the University of Memphis and the Memphis Chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

PROGRAM

Architecture Summer Camp operates from 9:00am until 2:00pm Monday through Friday. The camp program is structured around a variety of activities including an introduction to architectural and structural concepts, computer applications, model building, and freehand drawing. The program of study also includes trips to construction projects, visits to architectural offices, and a walking tour of historic sites. Local architects, engineers, landscape architects, and other design professionals serve as guest lecturers. A variety of special lectures and films are also offered.

Working closely with the camp instructors in the design studios of the Architecture Program at the University of Memphis, camp participants receive special, individual attention in the areas of architecture and design. Beginning with basic design problems, the camp experience culminates with the presentation of student projects including both architectural drawings and models.

Students who successfully complete Architecture Summer Camp receive a special certificate after they present their work to family and friends on Saturday, June 14, from 9:00am to noon. Projects completed in camp may be used in a portfolio for application to architecture school.

REGISTRATION & COST

Early registration is encouraged due to limited space available. The cost of Architecture Summer Camp is $300 if paid before June 1, 2008, and $350 after. Tuition covers instruction, materials, and field trips. Scholarships based on merit and financial need are available to qualified students.
